

Overtourism

Can a city have too many visitors?

More people travel today than ever before. For some beautiful places, that is a problem.

Thousands of tourists crowd the streets and beach in Positano, Italy.

WARM-UP

Talk about the questions with a partner.

1. Do you like busy places or quiet places? Why?
2. Why do tourists come to your town or city?

USEFUL LANGUAGE

I like... because...

They come to see...

In Barcelona, some people who live in the city walked through the streets with water pistols. They sprayed a little water at tourists outside the cafés. It was a kind of joke, but the message was serious: "Tourists, go home." Barcelona welcomes more than 30 million visitors a year. Many residents now feel that the city is not really theirs.

This problem has a name: overtourism. It happens when a place gets more visitors than it can manage. The streets become very crowded. Prices go up. Small local shops close, and new shops open for tourists. Venice, Amsterdam and Kyoto all know this feeling well.

The numbers are surprising. Fewer than 50,000 people live in Venice, but 100,000 tourists can arrive there in a single day. Now Venice asks day visitors to pay a small fee of five euros. Amsterdam does not allow new hotels. On Mount Everest, climbers sometimes wait in a long line near the top.

But tourism is not the enemy. It brings jobs and money, and it brings people from different countries together. Some cities want to limit the number of visitors. Other people say we need a better way to travel. Nobody has an easy answer yet.

Who does a city really belong to — the people who live there, or the people who visit?

DISCUSSION

USEFUL LANGUAGE I think... · For me... · because... · It depends.

- 1 Have you visited a place with too many people? How did you feel?
- 2 Do many tourists come to your town or city? What do they come to see?
- 3 Why can tourists and residents feel differently about the same place?
- 4 Is it fair to ask tourists to pay a fee? Why or why not?
- 5 Who does a famous city belong to: the residents or the visitors?

01 CRITICAL THINKING

YOU ARE THE TOWN COUNCIL

40,000 people live in your town. Three million tourists visit every year.

You are the town council. Choose your rules. Every rule helps someone and it costs someone. Work in a group and choose together.

THE RULE	IT HELPS	IT COSTS	YES
Tourists pay a small fee	The town gets money to clean and repair the streets.	Tourists with little money, and the cheap hotels.	☐
Fewer big ships each day	Thousands of people do not arrive at the same time.	Tour guides and the shops next to the port.	☐
No new hotels	Visitor numbers stop growing every year.	People who want new jobs in building and in hotels.	☐
Apartments only for residents	Rents go down, so local families can stay in the town.	Neighbors who rent their rooms to tourists for more money.	☐
Change nothing	The town keeps all the jobs and all the money.	The families who leave the town, one by one.	☐

YOUR CHOICE Rules we say yes to: _____ of 5 The people who will not be happy: _____

- DISCUSS
- 1 Your job is in a hotel. Do you choose the same rules? Why or why not?
 - 2 Compare with another group. Who helped the residents more? Who kept more jobs?
