SAMPLE ANSWER

I believe it is far better to own a few good clothes than many cheap ones. A well-made garment may cost more at first, but if it is durable it will last for years, while cheap items made from thin textiles often fall apart after a few washes.

Buying less also reduces our consumption and the huge amount of water and waste behind every piece of clothing. When we dispose of fewer clothes, we save money and help the planet at the same time. Of course, quality clothing is not cheap, and not everyone can afford it. But even buying one good item instead of five poor ones is a step in the right direction. In the end, owning less but better is a smarter and kinder choice.
